

Don't forget...

You must RSVP by June 10th if you want to hear David Langille and Suzanne Babin, executive producers of the future documentary film, Poor No More, discuss this exciting new venture.

Langille and Babin will speak at the CCSD's Briefing Notes session on June 13th in Ottawa.

Their feature documentary – which will premiere at the Canadian Social Forum in May 2009 – plans to take poor Canadians on a personal journey to see first-hand what is being done in Canada and in other countries to reduce and eliminate poverty.

In a style similar to Michael Moore's Sicko, the documentary promises to cut through the rhetoric to explore what is being accomplished in the struggle against poverty, and how individuals, governments and communities can change the structures that create poverty in the first place.

Come join the Canadian Council on Social Development on June 13th to hear more about plans for this feature documentary and how you can support its development.

If other countries can make progress in the fight against poverty, why can't we?
